What can happen to a child who violates curfew. . . . .

If the Court finds that a child has violated the curfew laws, the court can impose a variety of sanctions including:

- Community Service
- License suspension
- Place the child on court supervision
- Place a child outside the home
- Impose court costs
- Essays
- Attend counseling or a therapeutic group
- Or any other option the Judge thinks would benefit the child.

First time curfew violators who have no other charges, may be offered a Court Diversion Program. This program offers youth and their families the opportunity to participate in an educational group on high risk behavior or other options through diversion.

Why are curfew violations filed?

It is up to parents and local law-enforcement to work together to make sure young people do not get in trouble with the law.

Underage drinking, drug use, vandalism and worse crimes can and do result when young people are unsupervised at night. Sometimes innocent kids are caught up in unlawful acts.

Protect yourself or your child from being in the wrong place at the wrong time. Know the curfew laws in your community.

Cities and villages in the county adopt their own curfew times; therefore, parents and juveniles are often confused about the law. Nevertheless, it is the responsibility of the child and his/her parent to know the law and insure compliance with a particular jurisdiction's curfew ordinances.

It is important for both parents and youth to be aware of the curfew laws because they are a tool for keeping our young people and communities safe.

In order to be out after curfew a child must be accompanied by a parent or legal guardian. Simply having permission from a parent for a child to be out after curfew will not avoid a charge under various curfew ordinances.
